Besides, dojo is open source, i.e. it is free and open to development. So if you are looking for a JavaScript framework to meet your business requirements, I suggest you to give dojo a try. In this article, I'm going to introduce dojo features which are particularly useful for business-related application.

1. Dojo's helper classes The most powerful feature of dojo is the helper classes. Helper classes are based on MooTools, but some important parts are rewritten to make them more friendly to beginners. As I mentioned, dojo is open source, so you can take a look at its source code. For example, `dojo.lang.oo()` is a helper class to do object-oriented programming. There are two syntaxes to define a function or a method on it. `Dojo.lang.oo.create(myname, myVal)` or `Dojo.lang.oo({ myname: myVal})`
2. JSON `dojo.toJson(obj)` `dojo.fromJson(json)` `dojo.fromJson(json, obj)` `dojo.fromJson(json, obj, callback)` These four methods are helper classes to do JSON processing. They are used as alternatives of `JSON.parse` and `JSON.stringify` functions.
3. Node This is an important helper class to handle asynchronous operation. It is based on Prototype and jQuery. Dojo has some built-in functions to communicate with Node.js. For example, to request a page via HTTP GET, you can use `dojo.xhrGet()`. You can also use `dojo.xhrPost()` for XMLHttpRequest.
4. Deferred There are three types of deferred objects in dojo. They are Promise, Deferred, and PromiseFulf
