Kobe Bryant's love affair with Nike Basketball has lasted nearly three decades. Over that time he's worn almost every new iteration of signature Nike shoes imaginable, and has even gone back to his roots with a pair of the Kobe 9 Elite, in a nod to the signature 2003 Kobe model. With those notable classics behind him, it's understandable that many wonder just how interested Bryant is in Nike's latest innovations, and his latest sneaker drop appears to showcase the answer. On Tuesday afternoon, the Lakers' star released the new "Kobe 7", a modern update of the Kobe 9 Elite that has completely overhauled the upper. Aside from the bright royal blue colorway that contrasts sharply with the gray body, you'll notice two major tweaks to the upper that are meant to emulate the style of the original Kobe 9's. The heel hoop is lighter in color than the previous iteration, while the addition of a toebox detailing gives the shoe a clean and refined look. Another nod to the original design is the shoe's signature insole, which features Bryant's signature sneaker profile as well as the number "7" and "Lakers" script on the insole. The "Kobe 7" will be available in limited quantities online at Nike.com as well as select retailers throughout the week. Release date: October 3, 2018 Q: Conf 2d92ce491b
