The effects of metoclopramide (3 x 10<sup>-8</sup> to 10<sup>-5</sup> M), carbamazepine (10<sup>-5</sup> to 3 x 10<sup>-3</sup> M), phenobarbital (10<sup>-4</sup> to 10<sup>-1</sup> M), and phenytoin (10<sup>-4</sup> to 10<sup>-1</sup> M) on GTP (0.3 to 10 mM)-induced contractions of the guinea-pig ileum were investigated. All agents significantly antagonized GTP-induced contractions in a concentration-dependent manner. The reversal of GTP-induced contraction was abolished by 10<sup>-4</sup> M tetrodotoxin. Metoclopramide, carbamazepine, and phenobarbital were found to be more potent in antagonizing the contractile response to GTP than phenytoin. The antagonism was not affected by atropine or by d-tubocurarine., "as anyone who has looked into the matter would know."
