Energy The Ontario government is working to protect Ontario's energy supply and expand its energy capacity while at the same time ensuring that energy costs remain low for residents and businesses. Ontario's energy policies focus on five main areas: Integrate Ontario's low-cost, low-carbon energy generation capacity into the province's energy system to help meet Ontario's climate change goals. Address the uncertainty surrounding the future energy mix and transmission infrastructure needed in Ontario. Build an adequate infrastructure system to connect generation and transmission to consumers. Increase the competitiveness of the electricity supply chain through comprehensive measures to reduce energy costs. Develop policies to generate clean energy and ensure Ontario's energy supply security. Bring forward significant investments to maximize the reliability of Ontario's energy system, reduce greenhouse gas emissions, and improve the resilience and sustainability of the system. Encourage greening of the electricity supply chain through measures such as utility-led sourcing of green power, the purchase of green power by large electricity users, and by providing transmission network service providers with market signals to incentivize green
