Q: React.Dom.cloneNode() vs ReactDOM.createDocumentFragment() I have a component which runs a calculation and appends the result to the body. If I run into an issue the component can crash. This issue happens in IE only so I'm trying to upgrade from react 0.14 to react 0.15. The problem is that a seemingly working fix in previous versions does not work in the newest. After updating the release version of react to 0.15.3 and trying to update my components, I run into a problem. I've simplified my code as much as possible, hoping to get some help on what to do about this. Render method: render() { const node = (Render App); return (Content); } The problem in detail: When a button is pressed, the component calculates some content and puts it in a variable named node. I'm trying to clone the node and I'm currently using this: const node = React.Dom.cloneNode(node); Issue: However, this doesn't work in the newest version of react, so I instead use this (also works): const node = ReactDOM.createDocumentFrag
