New York, I Love You: Movies From New York City (2008) Kiedis was reluctant to star in the remake. “It’s very New York,” he said. “I think it’s great.” “For us to do this movie means that we have to be bigger than life,” he added. The film stars Mary-Kate Olsen and Ashley Olsen, with the film being co-written and directed by sibling Dan Gordon, and . But Gere, who had gotten great reviews for his 2007 movie An Education, is recognized as a "classically handsome movie star" by Vanity Fair, and "a perfect romantic leading man" by Entertainment Weekly. The poster for Gere's movie, or the real-life New York City skyline, is all over the place, including on the sides of the buses in the film. Using JDBC, i'm able to do everything but when i have to create a map i don't know how to work with it. How can i create a map in a java servlet or any way? Thanks A: as @sotirios said you should use sessions for that, but in order to have it more or less independent of your controllers and views, you could also use cookie instead of sessions for the user login. i don't know if it's a good idea to stick with java web development, there are many ways to make a web app, and i have to say that there are also other frameworks, like j2ee for the web development. here's one way to do it using session. you have a class that extends HttpServlet (your controller). then you have to override the doPost method, where you create the form to post the login data HttpSession session=request.getSession();

if(someCondition){ if(notAuthenticate){ //close the connection }else{ session.setAttribute("user",yourUserObject); r esponse.sendRedirect(joinPath("your/path/in/your/webapp")); } //if you're redirecting, this line is useless //return "your/view"; } your view or your controller could be the one that takes the information from the attribute and the user name/password to do the login using sessions if the user is authenticated. You can also take a look here (the tutorial is for j2ee but i think that you can adapt it to a simpler jsp tutorial)
