I. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to the field of magnetic tape drives used in data storage systems, and more particularly to methods for detecting tape failures in a rapid and reliable manner. II. Description of the Related Art Tape drives are employed in various different applications to transfer data from a storage media to a host such as a computer system. One type of tape drive is a linear tape drive in which a linear array of tape heads is used to transfer data along a length of magnetic tape that is transported over the array in a serpentine fashion. Various different methods have been employed to detect failed tape drives. For example, a linear tape drive may generate a mechanical fault or a current fault when a failure is detected, and the host can then be notified that a failure has occurred. Various methods have also been employed to detect degraded tape performance (e.g., increased tape drive motor current), such as in the event that the tape drive is idle for an extended period of time without performing a tape backup operation. Various systems and methods are employed to signal degraded tape performance based upon the motor current, and the host is then typically prompted to do a tape backup operation to recover the loss of data. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 6,044,403, which is incorporated herein by reference, describes a tape drive system for such a scenario, wherein the tape drive generates an error alert when the tape drive is idle for a specified period of time with increased motor current. One problem with the above approach is that tape drive systems often continuously operate and shut themselves down only when a tape fault or other error condition is detected, and therefore, the tape drive is unavailable for use when such a fault or error condition is detected. Tape drives used in backup systems must therefore be designed to minimize the amount of time that the tape drive is unavailable. Since tape drives used in backup systems are typically utilized for long periods of time, they must be designed to be reliable and to provide a high fault tolerance. The Democratic National Committee has sued the Trump campaign, asking a federal judge to block a new type of contribution that can be made to a super PAC supporting Mr. Trump. The committee says it was formed to serve as a conduit for "small-dollar" donors to help Mr. Trump meet his promise to raise $1 billion for the 2016 election, but the Trump campaign and its affiliated groups, including the Trump Make America Great Again Committee, are attempting to raise a super PAC-like

Q: Can I import data from a PHP file to a MySQL table? I want to import a table in a MySQL table. I know that this is possible if the table exists in the same database and is in the same format (using the mysql_import) but I am just wondering if there is a way to achieve the same result with a different format so that i can import data from a file with php. So like if I can create a table in the same database with php and then use it as the mysql_import file. Can anyone give me some help with this please? I have searched and have found nothing. A: You can just open a file and read the data. You can add data. In the end you can use the `mysql_close()`. You can do it with PHP. But it would be best to use a `phpsql` extension.

Capsule-Recovery System for the Operative Treatment of Pediatric Shoulder Instability and Subluxation. This case study describes the application of a novel system for internal fixation of pediatric glenoid labral injuries to stabilize prereduction shoulder dislocations and subluxations in 10 children with clinical instability and symptomatic shoulders. Unique features of this system include its ability to provide secondary stabilization after an initial procedure. This preclinical case series describes the 2- and 3-year outcomes after using the device for this purpose.

Q: Pointer arithmetic and size of an array In a previous question I asked about how to figure out the size of an array by a given pointer to an element in the array. The provided answer worked for me, but the provided solution relied heavily on pointer arithmetic, not knowing the size of the array. I would like to see an example where the size of the array is not known. A: You could do something like this: `int arr[10]; int *p = arr; //... int a; do { a = *(++p); } while(--p!= p);` A: Maybe this will help: `char *p; p = &arr[0]; while(p`
