In this book, we use Photoshop CS3. If you're using an earlier version of Photoshop, you may find some differences in the menus, tools, and options described in this chapter. Also, you may find some tools that are not available in earlier versions of Photoshop; sometimes it's because they're added in CS3 but not in earlier versions. If you're using a previous version of Photoshop, you can download the latest version from the Adobe website at www.adobe.com. You may find new features in the CS3 version but the layout remains similar to previous versions. This book focuses on the Elements version of Photoshop. We show you how to use the Layouts and Print tools — common features that are easy to find and understand. We show you how to use the Layout tools to make a number of photo layout options and to save your photo manipulations as templates. We show you how to use the Print tools to create images that have all sorts of effects, including B&W and C-Type techniques, as well as basic black-and-white poster printing, and then we show how to use the Print module to create photo printing and color proofing tools. Photo Type and Graphics The most common tools in the Photoshop Elements workspace are the Graphics and Photo Type tools. The Photo Type tool allows you to add just about any element to the elements you add to the Photo Type and Graphic elements. You can add text, graphics, border, frame, and other effects to your photos. If you've never used Photoshop Elements before, the Photo Type tool may seem intimidating because it offers a lot of options. If you're just trying to display a couple of lineart elements in your picture, you may want to use the Graphik or Fotocabrik tools instead of the Photo Type tool. You can also use the Graphic tool to add lineart, gradient, or other graphic elements to your pictures. The Image Trace function shows you how to remove elements, such as people, from your image. Using the Rotate, Crop, and Smudge tools, you can twist and warp your photo in addition to clipping the image to a particular area. You can also do some basic image corrections, like sharpening, blurring, or even removing or adding special effects like distortions, echoes, embossing, and so on. Making cool pictures with the Creative Effects tools The Creative Effects tools let you add special effects such as bevels, drop

Lena Gabes Lena Gabes (born 20 February 1970) is a Swiss former pair skater. With her sister, Magdalena Habibová, she won the 1988 World Junior and 1988 World Junior silver medals. They finished fourth at the 1988 Winter Olympics in Calgary. They finished as high as seventh at the World Figure Skating Championships. Personal life Lena Gabes was born in Schaffhausen, Switzerland. Her mother and father were both dancers, and her father played a big role in her skating career. She has two older sisters. Her parents divorced when she was 18 years old, and she moved to St. Gallen. At the same time as she started skating professionally, she took a course in marketing and sales at a bank. Skating career Gabis began skating in 1974. She took up the sport on her own volition, preferring not to enroll in the national skating organization when she was young because she was not interested in "silly social events" and took interest only in training. She competed with her sister, Magdalena Habibová, from 1989 to 1992. Their parents divorced when Lena was about 10 years old and their mother had to take work to support the two girls. Gabes and her sister lived in a modest apartment in St. Gallen, as their mother had to give up her job to take care of the girls. By the time Gabes was 14 years old, she realized that she could make money by competing in figure skating. Magdalena also took up skating, and they formed an in-line skating team. The two girls competed in the junior category, sometimes together and sometimes by themselves. Magdalena left skating at about the same age as Gabes. Gabes, who was 16 when she teamed up with her sister, was sent to St. Gallen to train with their former coach. Their mother sent them to Mike Doleman, a skating coach. The Gabes' competition debut was in 1987 in Geneva. They won the gold medal in the 1987 World Junior Championships held in Ozawa, Japan. Magdalena Habibová was injured in 1987 and Gabes went on to win the silver medal. They finished fourth at the 1988 Winter Olympics, held in Calgary, Alberta, Canada. The Gabes sister's were invited to stay at Hülshoff, the Olympic village for figure skating. They lived there between years and traveled at the invitation of Japan

Q: How to get the specific field in a collection for multiple data? I have a collection which belongs to a parent document. I'm trying to get the name of a child of a parent document from the collection. I've tried using fields: $parent.children.info.name which I know doesn't work because it's looking for the name of the collection as a whole and not the specific instance. Is there a way to achieve this? A: in your for loop you could use an if statement to test if the current document is an instance of the parent document. for (var i = 0; i The prostate is the site of neoplasia of epithelial origin in up to 95% of all men with adenocarcinoma of the prostate. The incidence of prostate cancer in African American men is greater than in Caucasians, and it is associated with PSA screening and poorer prognosis. Thus, it is a cancer with greater impact on African American males. The major source of diagnostic and prognostic information for the vast majority of prostate cancer patients is the histologic diagnosis of the tumor specimen obtained at surgery or biopsy. This histologic diagnosis usually specifies that the lesion represents a tumor which might be benign, indolent, of intermediate prognosis, or malignant, requiring therapy. Tumor staging is based on the number of lymph nodes affected and the presence or absence of extracapsular extension. The Gleason grade of the tumor is an important predictor of the biological behavior of the tumor and is graded on a scale of 1 to 5, which is correlated with the biological aggressiveness of the tumor. Prostate cancer is increasingly being diagnosed using an initial sextant biopsy with extended to 12 or more cores in many cases. The results of these biopsies could be improved by imaging techniques to help physicians recognize more of the cancer foci and to help target biopsies. Active staining techniques and contrast media agents could enhance the ability of biopsy needles to reach, penetrate, and identify cancers. The PI has developed a strategy to target near-infrared absorbing dyes to tissues, and uses these in a prostate mapping technique to localize and target prostate cancer
