The Microsoft Project Tango may be gearing up to debut its next generation of augmented reality (AR) technology with the consumer release of the Windows 10 Fall Creator's Update, due to be released later this year. According to research firm Gartner, the project would be a major source of AR tech development for the Windows 10 platform and set Microsoft's AR strategy apart from the upcoming competition from Google and Apple. Project Tango is an initiative to commercialize the Microsoft HoloLens AR headset using sensors. It will be combined with Windows 10's built-in spatial mapping functionality, allowing AR headsets to track the user's body position to let AR apps with 3D-vision interact with the surrounding physical environment. Specifically, it's being positioned as a new computing platform, where hands free AR helps users capture
