Are there any good resources on how to use pickle module to serialize and deserialize custom classes in python? I have a class called Rate and it is in rates.py from pickle import * # load/store module for this class class Rate(object): def __init__(self, dtype, mat, T): self._dtype = dtype self._mat = mat self._T = T self._message = '' rate.py contains 2 functions: def load_rate(filename): return pickle.load(open(filename, 'rb')) def rate_to_string(rate): string = pickle.dumps(rate) return string There's a problem in the load_rate function, since I'm passing a class as argument. So when I want to load the rates from a file, pickle can't figure out how to instantiate this Rate class. Is there a way to convert Rates to pickles? A: class Rate(object): def __init__(self, dtype, mat, T): self._dtype = dtype self._mat = mat self._T = T self._message = '' def from_pickle(self, filename):

[Intra-abdominal pressure measurement by a new four-channel air-pouch device and its application]. Intra-abdominal pressure (IAP) was measured in 12 patients with abdominal injury using a new four-channel air-pouch apparatus (pressure-monitoring device). This apparatus consisted of an air-pouch containing a manometer (4 channels), a strain gauge on the skin (2 channels), and an amplifier (1 channel). The IAP was measured simultaneously with cardiopulmonary, aortic and central venous pressures under general anesthesia. The IAP was usually positive in 14 patients with multiple organ failure associated with abdominal injury. The maximum (136-480 mmHg) and mean (60-63 mmHg) IAP was inversely correlated with the systolic blood pressure (BP). The IAP increased in 7 patients with aortic regurgitation. The maximum IAP was well correlated with central venous BP and the veno-arterial BP gradient. IAP was frequently positive in patients with a poor outcome, although in this study there was no significant correlation between the IAP and the outcome. These results suggest that IAP must be frequently checked to detect the amount of organ dysfunction and the hemodynamic instability in patients with abdominal injury.Electrical recording of evoked potentials in a model simulating an end-stage heart failure. "Electrical" recording techniques have been compared to multichannel electroencephalography (EEG) recording techniques in a model simulating an end-stage heart failure. Changes of evoked potentials (EPs) were produced in dogs by electrical stimulation of the spinal cord. EP changes in this model could be classified into four types of changes: slow waves originating in the cord, epileptiform activities in the neocortex, and an increase in slow waves originating in the spinal cord and in the cortex. The results suggest that EPs induced by electrical stimulation of the cord and multichannel EEGs detected by the same anode-cathode electrode pair are essentially the same. In addition, it was found that slow waves increased when evoked potentials were recorded (multichannel EEG) and that slow waves increased further when evoked potentials were recorded (electrical recording).Digital subscriber line (DSL) technologies provide one or more high-speed signal paths over in-premises telephone wiring and interface with a central office.
