Adobe owns some 8,000 patents and offers a library of Photoshop tutorials that range from how to select faces in a photo to giving Photoshop menus a new look. Tutorials are highly useful. There are many tools and applications that offer guides and tutorials, but Photoshop offers a lot of ones that either are built right into the program, from the learning editor that you write them in to the text-based help system. Like many things, once you do learn a particular tool, having your own tutorials for it can save a lot of time and learning. Because Photoshop is such a wildly-popular tool, the number of tutorials available online is huge. Here are some of our personal favorite Photoshop tutorials that cover not only important aspects of the program, but also provide great subjects to learn and test your skills with.

Error proofing a LED TV I am looking to purchase a LED TV. While most LED panels are classified as safety, I'd like to make sure it has a method to plug it into and then turn off the power to it, making it as hard for children to mistakenly plug them in as possible. I have looked through the manufacturer's safety information and specifications of the TV and cannot find anything. I know in the past you could buy a remote that lets you turn it off, but in terms of making a little more secure, the number of buttons on it is quite daunting and I have never tried one of those. So, does anyone know if these TVs are regulated to automatically turn off when the power is removed? A: Yes. In the linked PDF you'll see that the TV you're buying does indeed turn off after power loss. The reason is not because it's dangerous (it's not, even if it does look dangerous) but because if you were to turn it on then it would take at least 3-5 minutes to get to a usable state - just the time needed to power up the majority of the way, just in case you didn't. The reason it does this is because the power source is rather straightforward - a couple of drivers, a chip, and a few resistors. There is no other control devices and so it's as safe as a TV from a power supply standpoint. (As a side note - TVs don't usually provide any power to the screen to backlight, that comes from elsewhere)

What is far more dangerous, though, is the content. I don't know what you're looking for in the safety section of your PDF, but it would be the cable inputs (if you connect to those, you're effectively broadcasting to the world, and a child with his fingers in a socket could feed you their worst nightmare).

What's New In Adobe Photoshop CC 2014?

Q: SQL injection and HTML encoding? So I have a code like this:

$f=$_POST['f'];
$s=$_POST['s'];
```

---

```
mysql_query("INSERT
INTO table VALUES('', '$f', '$s')"); And I would like to protect it against SQL injections and encoding. So I have my table like this:
$user=$_SESSION['user'];
$password=$_SESSION['
password']; $mysqli =
new mysqli('localhost', 'us ername', 'password', 'data basename'); if($mysqli-> connect_errno){

---

die('Error accessing database'); } but I don't know how to add this: ", '$user', '$password', '$data basename')" to "INSERT INTO table VALUES(", '$f', '$s')". What is the proper way of doing this? A: Never put user-supplied variables into the SQL statement, regardless of how it's escaped. If you want to bind values to the SQL

statement, use prepared statements instead.

Always bind parameters from user-supplied values, just as you do in the query: `$stmt = $mysqli->prepare("INSERT INTO table VALUES (?, ?, ?, ?)");` `$stmt->bind_param("ssss", $f, $s, $user, $password);` `$stmt->execute();` `$stmt->close();` Storing passwords in plaintext is a huge security risk, especially with user-supplied values. Use a salt, or `password_hash()` to create a strong password. (See the warnings about password storage in the manual).

A: The premise of your question is wrong. You can't prevent SQL injection by doing an insert: that's what the `query()` method is for. In any event, your SQL injection vulnerability is simply that `$f` and `$s` are coming from the `$_POST` array, and will be used as values when inserting into a database:

mysql_query("INSERT INTO table VALUES('', '$f', '$s')");

should be:

mysql_query("INSERT INTO table VALUES('', '$_POST['f']');
