Q: Posting large pdf to wordpress form I was wondering is there a plugin to generate a pdf form from a template and then send to a specific page. I know they are doing this by the way our system functions, but I am specifically looking to find a plugin that will allow this. Any help is appreciated. A: I have used the Simple PDF Forms Extension for several years to create forms from a template and send them to an email address, and then use the collected form data to post to a Wordpress page. You can also use this to create a SalesForce page that you can send the customer to after filling out the form. Another option is to create a form and then use the custom Fieldtype plugin to add other specific data fields that you could then add to a post. For this solution, you need the templates to use the Fieldtype plugin. To do this, you need to add a div container to the fieldtype.js file where you would otherwise add data fields (i.e. inside the switch statement), and add a second div container to the same file where you would create your from template. Here is a working example: "Ex vivo" culture of human osteoblasts on bio-inspired thin film microstructures: a new generation of biomaterials for orthopedic implants. The advancement of science and technology in the past century has led to the development of various computer-aided systems for the manufacture and design of implants. While the precision of these methods cannot be questioned, the fabrication of implants using conventional technologies may not take into consideration the material's biocompatibility and/or suitable mechanical properties. In this context, the use of bio-inspired microstructures (biomimicry) is a very promising way to achieve this goal. With the aim of fabricating new bio-inspired implant materials based on the recognition of morphological and mechanical properties of natural materials, we have developed a bio-inspired manufacturing method by integrating advanced surface treatments with a new generation of natural-based thin film microstructures (TFMs). Inspired by the structural and mechanical properties of some vertebrate skeletal elements, TFMs were generated using biocompatible (hydroxyapatite) and osteoconductive (β-tricalcium phosphate) thin films as templates. After surface modification of both thin film types using a
